Institutions and organizations expected to be visited during the course include:

Kent State University's historic 13th-century state-of-the-art Palazzo dei Cerchi in Florence; a third-party program provider in Florence and/or Rome; Association of American College and University Programs in Italy (AACUPI, in Rome); representatives of other USA-based program providers; sites in Siena and/or Pisa, and a wide range of historic and cultural sites in Rome and Florence.

About the course:

The course is designed to meet the needs of current and future faculty and administrators interested in learning how institutions extend, promote, and operate academic and student affairs beyond their national borders. The specific focus of this year's course is on the development and delivery of study Abroad programs, including third party providers, faculty-led programs and short-term programs. Participants will meet providers in Rome and Florence. The visit will coincide with the on-site orientation of students attending the Spring 2010 Kent State -- Florence campus. Participants will also undertake a one-day independent travel experience (such as to Pisa, Siena or Venice) as part of the course assignment in order to plan an educational travel program.
